

Relationship Check Ins

By Karen Goldsum

It is all too easy to let the frenetic pace of life eclipse our relationships. Couple meetings are a specific time that is dedicated solely to talking about the state of their relationship. Regular check-ins can help couples feel connected throughout the week.

How To Do A Relationship Check In

Consistency is important. Ideally both of you will be relaxed and in good spirits. Weekly appointments are the most common timetable.

Set A Time Limit

Initially these gatherings should be quick—about ten minutes is a great place to start. The most amount of time you should sink into these discussions is probably thirty minutes.

Make it Cozy

This is an opportunity for you to connect. Why not bring snacks and a special beverage? Also, you might consider doing these check-ins in a private setting so you can be more vulnerable.

Take Turns Answering Questions

Use the worksheet on the back to guide your conversation

Why Are Relationship Check Ins Important?

Regular meetings help increase emotional intimacy and help prevent conflict.

Weekly check ins engender

More trust,

Better communication,

Fewer arguments,

More quality time,

More appreciation

Deeper intimacy,

More

relationship

satisfaction

Additional Questions

Once you are used to these tet-a-tetes, you can use the following questions to galvanize more conversation.

What are your personal goals? Is there anyway your partner can support you in this area?

Since our last check in, what do you think has gone well between us?

Since our last check in, what happened that you think we could've handled better?

How can i help you feel loved/supported this week?

What goals do we want to accomplish together?

How are you really doing and what's going on in your heart?

how connected are you feeling?

Have you been jealous during the past week?

Our environment — What's working?

What's not?

What do you want to accomplish together in the future?

What do you love most about our relationship?

What do you need more of from me?

Are there resentments you are holding on to that we need to address?

Are we learning from our mistakes?

Do you feel secure in our relationship? Do you have examples from this week of why or why not?

Do you have any unresolved hurts or moments of disconnection from the past week that we should talk about?

what part of your daily routine is bringing you the most joy and comfort lately?

Is there anything I haven't done in a while that you miss?

What would you list as the biggest areas of concern right now for you personally?

Does your body hurt in any ways that I can accommodate or be careful of?

What do you think of as our big picture goals right now?

What can I do this upcoming week to support you?

In this upcoming week, what's one way we can deliberately be more connected?

What stories are running in your head about us or life right now?

When it comes to our relationship what scares you right now?

What are three things you love about us?

What is something you need to hear from me right now?

When it comes to physical intimacy would you say you experience more spontaneous arousal or responsive arousal?

Does your body hurt in any ways that I can accommodate or be careful of?

Are there any sensations you want to avoid?

Hello, My name is Karen Goldsum and I am a therapist Associate, supervised by Elaine Brandon.

I'm here to support you on your mental health journey. Feel free to connect with me via my website

Also, check out the worksheet on the back

It is all too easy to let the frenetic pace of life eclipse our relationships. Couple meetings are a specific time that is dedicated solely to talking about the state of their relationship. Regular check-ins can help couples feel connected throughout the week.

By Karen Goldsum

Relationship Check Ins

Consistency is important. Ideally both of you will be relaxed and in good spirits. Weekly appointments are the most common timetable.

Set A Time Limit
Initially these gatherings should be quick—about ten minutes is a great place to start. The most amount of time you should sink into these discussions is probably thirty minutes.

Make it Cozy
This is an opportunity for you to connect. Why not bring snacks and a special beverage? Also, you might consider doing these check-ins in a private setting so you can be more vulnerable.

Take Turns Answering Questions
Use the worksheet on the back to guide your conversation

How To Do A Relationship Check In

Hello, My name is Karen Goldsum and I am a therapist Associate, supervised by Elaine Brandon.

I'm here to support you on your mental health journey. Feel free to connect with me via my website

Also, check out the worksheet on the back

Regular meetings help increase emotional intimacy and help prevent conflict.

Why Are Relationship Check Ins Important?

Weekly check ins engender
More trust,
Better communication,
Fewer arguments,
More quality time,
More appreciation
Deeper intimacy,
More relationship satisfaction

What would you list as the biggest areas of concern right now for you personally?
Does your body hurt in any ways that I can accommodate or be careful of?
What do you think of as our big picture goals right now?
What can i do this upcoming week to support you?
In this upcoming week, what's one way we can deliberately be more connected?
What stories are running in your head about us or life right now?
When it comes to our relationship what scares you right now?
What are three things you love about us?
What is something you need to hear from me right now?
When it comes to physical intimacy would you say you experience more spontaneous arousal or responsive arousal
Does your body hurt in any ways that I can accommodate or e careful of?
Are there any sensations you want to avoid?

Once you are used to these teta-a-tetes, you can use the following questions to galvanize more conversation.

What are your personal goals? Is there anyway your partner can support you in this area?
Since our last check in, what do you think has gone well between us?
Since our last check in, what happened that you think we could've handled better?
How can i help you feel loved/supported this week?
What goals do we want to accomplish together?
How are you really doing and what's going on in your heart?
How connected are you feeling?
Have you been jealous during the past week?
Our environment — What's working? What's not?
What do you want to accomplish together in the future?

Additional Questions

What do you love most about our relationship?
What do you need more of from me?
Are there resentments you are holding on to that we need to address?
Are we learning from our mistakes?
Do you feel secure in our relationship? Do you have examples from this week of why or why not?
Do you have any unresolved hurts or moments of disconnection from the past week that we should talk about?
what part of your daily routine is bringing you the most joy and comfort lately?
Is there anything I haven't done in a while that you miss?

